THE LAST WORD

Kendo is quite unique in that it has two features: one is that it retains the characteristics of the vigorous combat on which a contestant's life would rely, and the other is the modern performance based on accepted rules. Furthermore, it was considered one of the essential virtues of Bushi (Samurai) and took a solid position in their daily life. We ought not to forget any of these three elements in learning Kendo. --Oshima, Tsutomi, President, IKF, message to the 8th World Kendo Championships, Toronto, 1991.
